Danger Signal
If the fire bell should ring would you run and stop it or go and help to put out the fire? It is much the same way with a cough. A cough is a danger signal as much as a fire bell. You should no more try to suppress it than to stop a fire bell when it is ringing, but should cure the disease that causes the coughing. This can nearly always be done by taking Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many have used it with the most beneficial results. It is especially valuable for the persistent cough that so often follows a bad cold or an attack of the grip. Mrs. Thomas Beeching, Andrews, Ind., writes: "During the winter my husband takes cold easily and coughs and coughs. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best medicine for breaking up these attacks and you cannot get him to take any other." Obtainable everywhere.

Cleaner and more effective than musky plasters or ointments. For rheumatic aches, neuralgia pain and that grippy soreness after colds, Sloan's Liniment gives prompt relief. Have a bottle handy for bruises, strains, sprains and all external pain. For the thousands whose work calls them outdoors, the pains and aches following exposure are relieved by Sloan's Liniment. ## CANFIELD'S ADVENTURE

By LOUISE OLIVER.

On rounding a curve of the beach, young Canfield spied a tent and on the other side a thin column of smoke. His breath came in quick gasps, signifying that he had been sprinting for some distance.

"Thank goodness!" he wheezed, "I'll get the fisherman to help me hunt."

But on the other side of the tent he found, instead of an old salt, a girl frying bacon in a long-handled skillet.

"I beg your pardon," gasped Canfield, "but did you see an elephant go along this way?"

The girl turned and regarded him seriously. "I don't remember," she answered. "Perhaps I did. I may have, but you see, so many elephants go by early in the morning that I really don't notice them particularly. Was your elephant any special kind—pink or striped or something like that?"

Canfield laughed and the girl, putting down her pan, laughed too. "Really I've never heard of anything so funny. How on earth did you happen to lose an elephant? How, in the first place, did you happen to have him at all?"

"Just because I'm a silly ass! Van Kleek and I were motoring through a village near here and it happened to be circus day. It seems business had been bad and while we were having lunch at the hotel we heard that the whole outfit was being sold by the sheriff. Van Kleek and I hurried over and he dared me to buy the trick elephant. I got him for twenty-five dollars. And then some lunk into Van's head. 'I'll bet you five thousand dollars,' said he, 'that you're not game to ride the rest of the way on this peanut-eating beast into the borough of Manhattan and up Fifth avenue to—'" Canfield stopped in confusion.

"To where?" she demanded.

"To a friend of mine," he finished evasively.

"May I help you hunt?"

"Nothing I'd like better." His face lighted up instantly.

Suddenly he gave a whoop. "Look here, quick! Here are his tracks, about as big as a washtub! Come on! Up this way. Let's hurry!"

They followed the trail up the beach, then across a grassy swamp to a grove of young saplings.

"I believe I hear him," he whispered. There was a crashing among the trees.

"Mercy, I'm getting terribly frightened. I wish I hadn't come."

He reached for her hand and held on to it. "Now listen. He won't hurt us if we just keep still. He's used to people. Picks 'em up and carries them all around in the circus. If he spies us let him alone and see what he'll do."

Sure enough the elephant came their way. The girl gripped Canfield's hand hard, but she didn't make a sound. The animal, seeing them, cantered up and stopped. Then gently he wrapped his trunk around Canfield's companion, lifted her over his head and set her carefully in the glided box on his back.

Then Canfield, too, felt himself lifted off his feet and the next instant he was beside the girl.

"Well, this is what I call homelike," exclaimed Canfield. "If we'd only brought some of that bacon. I'm hungry as a bear."

"Where do you suppose he's going?" cried the girl, for the elephant had started off toward the road at a gentle lope.

"Let us hope to the Bronx Zoo. Any place toward civilization and food." He had forgotten that he was to present himself at the door of a certain lady. He turned and took a good look at the girl beside him, slim and graceful in a blue sweater suit, her light brown hair blowing in little curls around her ears and forehead, and the flush of exercise and excitement in her cheeks. She was very, very pretty!

His hand still tingled where she had touched it. She raised her eyes suddenly as if to speak, then, seeing his own upon her, she dropped them, flushed a deep red and was silent.

"What were you going to say?" he asked.

"I'll tell you some time again. You are going to be very, very angry when I tell you, so I'd rather postpone it."

"Promise to tell me some time."

"Yes. Look. Here's a car."

"Van Kleek! And somebody with him!"

The car stopped and, strange to say, the elephant stopped, too. Van Kleek's companion got out and slipped a chain on the elephant's legs.

"Hello, Rusty, old boy!" said the man.

"Thank heaven, you're safe," called Van Kleek. "I worried over that fool bet till I couldn't sleep. Come on down out of that. You've won! Let his owner take him, for goodness' sake."

Then Canfield heard the girl give a queer little click with her tongue. The elephant reached up with his trunk, took her gently around the body and set her on the ground. Then he did the same with Canfield.

"Sort of a family reunion, isn't it, father," said the girl, leaning her head against the man's arm and looking mischievously at Canfield out of the corners of her eyes. "Let's all go down to my tent and have breakfast."

"I second the motion," assented Canfield, when he found his voice. "Van Kleek make that five thousand dollars over to our friend here, will you, and let him buy back his circus."

A Card to Owners of Rural Telephone Lines

We are anxious to see that all lines owned by other parties and connected with us are kept in such condition as to furnish efficient service. Where the owners of rural lines are responsible for their upkeep, we want to co-operate with them.

All lines require a thorough overhauling occasionally if the best service is to be obtained. We recommend that every line connected with us be overhauled at least once a year, and that at least one experienced telephone man assist in this work. The cost of this work when divided among all the patrons of the line, makes the amount paid by each small, and this cost will be more than offset by the improved service.

If the owners of rural telephone lines in this section are experiencing trouble with their service, we will appreciate their talking the matter over with our Manager or writing us fully. We will gladly do what we can toward helping you improve the condition of your line.
